Re: DGS Role (R4527)

Dear Bryon,

Most people answer a job post with a resume. I answered yours with a sample campaign, because you built your career in demand gen and I figured you would rather see how I work than read about it. You can see it here: <https://terrencemichaelscott.me/modmed>

Here is the skinny version of me. 7 years ago a doctor told me I was pre-diabetic and 180 pounds overweight. I could not even say the word exercise without panic, so I renamed the whole thing SUMMERBODY and went after it. 20 months later I'm half the man I used to be. I lost the weight, built a brand and a following around it, and ended up on national television Dr. 90210 telling that story. That same stubbornness, turning impossible into a plan and then into numbers, is how I run marketing. A true leader by influence.

On the marketing side, my degree is in Marketing from Nova Southeastern, Dean's List. I have built and segmented an email database past 12,000 contacts, run paid social on budgets up to 500 dollars a day, and shipped more than 25 multi-channel campaigns across email, landing pages, paid social, and events. I like the unglamorous part of this job, the weekly report, because that is where you find out what is working and what to cut.

Your posting splits the Key Segment and the Strategic Segment, and that framing is smart. A 1 to 3 provider owner buys time back. A 4 to 19 provider group weighs total cost of ownership and staff retention. Same funnel, different message, and I am comfortable building and reporting on both, then handing clean, qualified leads to Sales Development.

ModMed is personal for me. I have worn glasses since I was 7 and grown up in exam chairs. Marketing software that gives doctors their time and attention back is something I believe in, not just something I can sell.

The page above shows a sample Key Segment funnel, a mock weekly report, my first 90 days, and my resume, all in one place. I would be glad to walk you or your team through it.

Thank you for your time, and for the work ModMed does for doctors.

Respectfully,

Terrence Michael Scott
